Anton Bruckners Dritte Symphonie stellt nach dem „Sturm und Drang“ der „Ersten“ und der besinnlichen Einkehr der „Zweiten“ die erste Großtat des gereiften Symphonikers dar. Mit ihr hat der Meister seinen Symphoniestil wenn nicht gerade gefunden, so doch zumindest ausgebaut. Jedenfalls ist die „Dritte“ das orste ganz und voll „brucknerische“ seiner symphonischen Werke zu nennen. Durch diese Klassifikation soll der Wert der vorausgehenden zwei keineswegs irgendwie herabgemindert sein, da jedes dieser Werke ganz speziell eigenartige Bedeutung besitzt.

Das Manuskript der Symphonie gibt keinen Aufschluß über den Beginn der Arbeit. Dieser dürfte noch in das Jahr 1872 fallen. Beendet wurdo der erste Satz am 23. Februar 1873 in der Skizze, am 16. Juli in der Partitur. Das Adagio schrieb Bruckner zwischen dem 23. Februar und 24. Mai. Die Instrumentation des Scherzo wurde den 11. März 1873 in Wien, die Komposition des Finale am 31. August in Marienbad (Böhmen), dessen Instrumentation am 29. Dezember beendet. Diese erste Fassung der Symphonie ist nicht die endgültige geblieben; der mit seinen Leistungen so oft unzufriedeno Meister unterzog sie 1876/77 einer zweiten, 1889 aber noch einer dritten durchgreifenden Umarbeitung. In der ersten Fassung enthält das Werk an mehreren Stellen neben Anklängen an Richard Wagner auch direkte Zitato aus dessen Bühnenwerken. Damit wollte der „naive Meister offenbar Wagner seine Huldigung erweisen“ (Auor).

Bruckner hatte nämlich die Symphonie schon während ihrer Komposition zur Widmung an Wagner, den er glühend verehrte, bestimmt. Nach Beendigung der Finaleskizze reiste er von Marienbad, wo er zur Kur verweilt hatte, nach Bayreuth, um die Annahme dieser Zueignung zu erwirken. In Max Auers ausgezeichneter Biographie Bruckners wird die ergötzliche Geschichto dieser Widmung ausführlich behandelt. Das Ergebnis aller Bemühungen war denn auch die Erreichung des vorgesteckten

Following upon the “storm and strife” spirit of Bruckner’s First symphony and the self-contemplative Second symphony, Bruckner’s Third marks the first great work from that composer’s mature period. It is probably the first one in which Bruckner planfully applied his self-constructed symphonic style, and, at any rate, the first one which may bo termed truly “Brucknerian”. Such statement should not be interpreted as an attempt to belittle the two preceding symphonies of the master both of which aro important and characteristic of their kind.

The MS. of Bruckner’s third symphony does not contain any suggestions as to the date when the composor began work upon it. However, this was most likely in 1872. Tho draft of the first movement was completed on February 23rd, the completo score of this movement on July 16th of that year. The Adagio was composed between February 23rd and May 24th. The orchestration of the Adagio was finished at Vienna on March 11th, 1873, the composition of the Finale on August 31st, at Marienbad (Bohemia), and the scoring of that movement on December 29th. This first version of the symphony, however, was not retained by Bruckner. Owing to his severe and often shown self-criticism, Bruckner revised it in 1876/77 and again in 1889. The first version of the symphony contained several Wagnerian reminiscences, indeed in many places literal quotations from Wagner’s operas which Auer interprets as a ”naive homage to the revered master“, since Bruckner had composed this work with a view to dedicating it to Richard Wagner. When the draft of the Finale had been completed, Bruckner interrupted his cure at Marienbad and travelled to Bayreuth to persuade Wagner to accept the dedication. Max Auer’s excellent biography of Anton Bruckner gives a long and amusing narrative of this episode. Bruckner’s efforts actually resulted in the desired acceptanco on tho part of Wagner who thought very highly of Bruckner. The later version of the third symphony

La troisième symphonie d’An-toine Bruckner constitue, apr[illegible] le »Sturm und Drang« de la Pr[illegible]mière et le recueillement pond[illegible] de la Seconde, le premier haut fait symphonique du maître p[illegible]venu à la maturité. C’est da[illegible] cette »troisième« que le com[illegible]siteur a sinon trouvé, du mo[illegible]s élargi son style symphoniq[illegible]. En tout cas, la »Troisième« [illegible] la première de ses oeuvres sym-phoniques qui puisse être qu[illegible]lifié de »Brucknérienne« da[illegible] toute la force du terme. Ce[illegible] classification ne prétend d’aille[illegible] nullement ravaler les deux pr[illegible]mières symphonies, dont ch[illegible]cune a une signification origina[illegible] toute spéciale

Lo manuscrit de la sympho[illegible] ne fournit pas d’indication qu[illegible] à la date où le compositeur [illegible] mit à la tâche. Il y a lieu [illegible] présumer que ce fut dès 18[illegible]. Le premier mouvement fut achev[illegible] à l’état d’esquisse le 23 févri[illegible] 1873, et en tant que la partiti[illegible] le 16 Juillet de la même ann[illegible]. L’adagio fut écrit par Bruckn[illegible] entre lo 23 février et le 24 m[illegible]. L’instrumentation du scherzo f[illegible] terminée le 11 mars 1873 à V[illegible]enne, la composition du Fina[illegible] le 31 août à Marienbad (Bohême[illegible] et l’instrumentation de ce fina[illegible] le 29 décembre. Cette premiè[illegible] version de la symphonie n’e[illegible] pas restée définitive. Le maît[illegible] qui était si souvent méconte[illegible] de son propre travail soumit la symphonie à une première r[illegible]vision de fond en comble en 1876/7[illegible] et à une seconde en 1889. Da[illegible] la première version, l’oeuv[illegible] présente par endroits, outre d[illegible] réminiscences de Richard Wa[illegible]ner, de veritables citations e[illegible]pruntées aux drames musica[illegible] du maître de Bayreuth, en qu[illegible] Bruckner voulait »sans do[illegible] naivement rendre un hommage à Wagner« (Auer). D’ailleu[illegible] Bruckner avait dès les premièr[illegible] esquisses de composition reser[illegible] la dédicace de la sympho[illegible] à Richard Wagner qu’il vén[illegible]rait avec ferveur. L’esquisse [illegible] finale terminé, Bruckner quit[illegible] Marienbad où il prenait les eau[illegible] pour se rendre à Bayreuth, [illegible] vue d’obtenir l’agrément do ce[illegible] dédicace. Dans l’excellente b[illegible]graphie de Bruckner par Ma[illegible] Auer, l’amusante histoire [illegible] cette dédicace est rapportée [illegible] détail. Tous les efforts dépen[illegible]

Zieles: Wagner, der unseren Meister sehr schätzte, nahm die Widmung der Symphonie entgegen. — Die genannten Zitate aus Wagner wurden in der späteren Fassung des Werkes wieder beseitigt; nur knapp vor Schluß des Adagio ist ein solches Zitat — natürlich gewollt — stehengeblieben. („Schlafmotiv“ aus der „Walküre“, Takte 209—211.)

Es wäre gänzlich verfehlt, den Tonschöpfungen Bruckners „Programme“ unterlegen zu wollen. Auch die Vierte Symphonie (die „Romantische“), bei welcher dies noch eher berechtigt scheinen könnte, macht hievon keine Ausnahme. Etwas ganz anderes aber ist es mit dem Stimmungsgehalt eines symphonischen Werkes. Durch die vorliegende Dritte Symphonie geht unverkennbar ein heldenhafter Zug. Kraft, Macht, auch wohl Pracht, gepaart mit den zartesten Gefühlen, demutsvolle Unterordnung unter den Willen des Höchsten, gläubiges Beten, aber auch urwüchsig-derbe Fröhlichkeit, dann Kampf und Sieg und vor allem das unserem Meister eigene unvergleichliche sich Durchringen nach oben — all dies klingt uns aus seiner Dritten Symphonie entgegen. Und auch sie könnte, gleich der Dritten Beethovens, den Namen „Eroica“ tragen. Die Uraufführung des Werkes (in der zweiten Fassung) erfolgte am 16. Dezember 1877 durch das Orchester der Wiener Philharmoniker unter des Meisters persönlicher Leitung Sie war ein ausgesprochener Mißerfolg. Publikum und Kritik lehnten die Symphonie einstimmig ab. Sie war für jene Zeit zu neu und kühn. Bruckner hatte mit ihr Wege beschritten, die vor ihm noch keiner gegangen war. Nur wenige vermochten ihm zu folgen, darunter der Wiener Musikverleger Th. Rättig, der trotz Mißerfolg den Mut aufbrachte, das Werk in Verlag zu nehmen und in Partitur, Orchesterstimmen und Klavierauszug im Druck erscheinen zu lassen.

Wien, August 1927.

eradicated the Wagner quotations, with the exception of one passage towards the close of the Adagio (bars 209—211) with its reminiscence of the Slumber motive from The Valkyrie.

It would be utterly wrong to interpret Bruckner's symphonies as "programme music"; even the Fourth (Romantic) symphony where such attempts may to some extent be justified, makes no exception in this respect. Rather one may speak of a certain uniformity of "atmosphere" within each of Bruckner's symphonies. There is undoubtedly a certain "heroic" mood which forms the basic character of the third symphony. Strength, even pomp coupled with most tender feeling; humble devotion to the will of the Almighty; fervent prayer; but also a sturdy, robust merriness; strife and victory and, above all, the lofty and triumphant idealism: all that we find in the music of Bruckner's third symphony, which may justly be by-named "Eroica" like Beethoven's Third.

The first performance of the symphony (in its second version) occurred on December 16th, 1877, through the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of the composer — and met with complete failure. Both public and press were unanimous in their dislike of this symphony which was too novel and too bold for its time. But few were able to follow Bruckner on his new and daring road — among them Th. Rättig, the Viennese musicpublisher who, notwithstanding the failure of the symphony, mustered the courage to publish in print the score, orchestral parts and the piano score.

Vienna, August 1927.

par Bruckner aboutirent finalement. Wagner qui tenait Bruckner en une particulière estime, accepta la dédicace de la symphonie. Les citations de Wagner dont on a parlé ci-dessus furent éliminées de la version définitive, sauf immédiatement avant la fin de l'Adagio. où a subsisté une citation de ce genre, évidemment voulue. (Motif du sommeil de la Walkyrie mes. 209—211.)

Rien ne serait moins judicieux que de vouloir supposer des »programmes« aux créations symphoniques de Bruckner, et cela sans exception même pour la quatrième symphonie dite »romantique« où il serait à la rigueur plus indiqué de le faire. Mais sans parler de programme, on peut parler de l'atmosphère fondamentale de ces oeuvres symphoniques. Or il est incontestable qu'un souffle d'héroïsme traverse la troisième symphonie. Force, puissance, magnificence même, alliées au sentiment le plus délicat, humble soumission à la suprême volonté, foi et prière n'excluant pas une jovialité décidée d'une force toute primitive, combat et victoire, et, avant tout, l'incomparable lutte ascensionnelle propre au maître Bruckner, autant d'impressions qui se dégagent des sonorités de sa troisième symphonie. Elle aussi comme la troisième de Beethoven, pourrait porter le titre d'eroica. La première audition (dans la seconde version) fut donnée le 16 décembre 1877 sous la direction personnelle du maître par l'orchestre des »Philharmoniker« de Vienne. Ce fut un franc échec. Le public et la critique furent unanimes à rejeter l'oeuvre. Elle était trop nouvelle et trop hardie pour l'époque. Bruckner s'était engagé avec elle sur des voies, qui nul n'avait foulées avant lui. Rares furent ceux qui le comprirent; il y eut toutefois parmi ceux-ci l'éditeur de musique Th. Rättig de Vienne, à qui l'échec de l'exécution n'ôta point le courage d'éditer l'oeuvre, et d'en faire paraître la partition, les parties d'orchestre et une réduction pour piano.

Vienne, Août 1927.
